

No duty to disclose allegations of misconduct to employer

An employee does not have an implied duty to disclose to his employer allegations made against him whilst working elsewhere.

Dismissal of outspoken Christian employee was discriminatory

The dismissal of a Christian employee who expressed negative views in respect of her colleague's homosexual lifestyle was held to be discriminatory.