

BDBF bulks up as specialist employment and partnership firm rides wave of continued growth

BDBF, the specialist employment and partnership law firm, is strengthening its team with the arrival of four new associates, alongside the return of Managing Associate Theo Nicou and Senior Associate Rebecca Rubin from family leave. The firm continues to develop momentum and respond to increased demand for its specialist advice.

This expansion represents yet another major development in BDBF's ongoing growth and demonstrates the consistent demand for the firm's expertise in complex employment and partnership matters. The firm advises both individuals and organisations on some of the most sensitive, high stakes and strategically important issues within the workplace. BDBF's boutique model provides clients with specialised technical knowledge combined with a highly personal approach.

The arrival of four new associates increases BDBF's capacity to support clients while maintaining the quality and specialist focus for which the firm is known. Additionally, the return of Theo and Rebecca will further strengthen the senior level capacity of the team. With the additional experience and expertise injected into the firm during this period of continued growth, BDBF can continue to provide first-class advice and support to its clients.

BDBF Managing Partner Gareth Brahams said:

“BDBF has continued to go from strength to strength, and this latest expansion reflects the demand we are seeing from both existing and new clients. Our decision to hire additional staff is intended to enable us to meet those demands while continuing to deliver the same high quality advice, specialist expertise and responsive services that have helped establish our reputation.

We are delighted to welcome four talented new associates to the firm and equally pleased to have Theo and Rebecca back with us. Along with our newest hires, their return gives us even greater depth and enables us to continue supporting clients on increasingly complex employment and partnership matters.

Our growth is not about growth for its own sake. It is about ensuring that BDBF has the strength and capacity to continue delivering exceptional advice to clients when they need it most.”

The firm’s latest appointments build on BDBF’s strong recent momentum, further establishing its position as a leading specialist boutique in the employment and partnership law market.

With an increasingly complex employment landscape where both individuals and organisations are facing greater legal and strategic challenges, BDBF continues to see strong demand for advice that combines technical excellence with a clear understanding of the commercial, professional and personal context in which employment and partnership disputes arise.
