LinkedIn has some 800million users globally and, at networking events, the traditional business card has given way to QR codes and NFC tags for ease of connecting. With professional networks being such a key part of many employees’ currency, who owns what on LinkedIn when switching jobs? And how else can social media land an employee in hot water if they become part of the #Great Resignation?

Managing Associate @Tom McLaughlin answers these questions in this article for Financial News. (subscription required):
